Götessons' parent company strengthens their board with Isabelle Sjövall. Isabelle has previously been a board member at Götessons Industri AB and Akustikmiljö i Falkenberg AB, both a part of the Götessons consortium. Isabelle Sjövall is a neuro designer and expert at research-based health beneficial design and how our brains react to physical environments. Focusing on human sustainability, she has long experience in advanced projects within architecture, design, product development and property optimization.

"Isabelle has been an enormously valuable support during her time as board member for Akustikmiljö and Götessons, and it feels very positive that she wants to continue her engagement in Götessons and our journey with Accent", says Emil Johansson, CEO and president of the Götessons consortium.

"It is positive with companies such as Götessons who are at the forefront of developing the future's design with focus on health and sustainability. Together and with the right knowledge and new innovation, we have a unique possibility to powerfully drive the development of our trade in the right direction. It is both exciting and interesting to contribute to this important work", says Isabelle Sjövall, neurodesigner and board member at Götessons.

"We are very happy that Isabelle places her continued faith in Götessons, the company's management and us in the new board. Isabelle will be a fantastic addition to both the board and management, and will contribute with unique insights within product development, sustainability and future health beneficial design", says Niklas Sloutski, chairman at Götessons.
